Q: Why do people suggest the use of pre-emptive strikes against AQ? Since 9/11, a lot of people have suggested the use of pre-emptive strikes against Al Qaeda operatives in Pakistan and Afghanistan. Why do people feel that AQ is a serious threat to the US? Is there some proof for this? A: I couldn't comment on this, but I heard the same thing around 2005-2006 time frame and was also under the impression that it wasn't that serious. On one hand it's generally accepted that the US government has changed its mind on it (at least in the past 15 years or so). On the other hand, many feel that Al Qaeda groups are not really that capable and there is no evidence that they have been in a position to actually pull off an attack on the US. Additionally there is a lot of skepticism of any actual threat of Al Qaeda operating in the US. Many (not all, but it seems like most) people feel that it just wouldn't happen. Granted it hasn't happened exactly so we don't really know, but that's often the approach taken with anything that hasn't actually happened yet. A: The history of the use of the term 'preemptive strike' gives its own answer. The main current purpose of the phrase is to prevent future threats, and a tactic of providing missiles to target the leadership is highly successful in achieving this. However, the phrase seems to imply that the attack is a threat in and of itself, and who know how much room we have to play with the words? It is certainly the case that for an example, the US and UK almost certainly had the technology to launch a nuclear strike on Germany in 1945 (WW2). My feeling, though, is that we would not wish to do this (at least, not if we still had real weapons - we all know what happened to the DuPont yanks!) A: He was going to tell us how great the US is and what it has done for the world but... He never made it. ...so we don't know. But the powers that be have reasons and those reasons don't include Al Qaeda. The US hasn't been caught eavesdropping on it's closest allies or carrying out illegal wars on country's it considers part of its "arc of influence" or any other number of reasons. And, regardless

Q: How to create a search page? I have a page that loads data from a database. I want to add a textbox with a button which when clicked it should search for the text in my database. How would i go about this, its not a single textbox is there a way to do it? Any help is appreciated. A: The easiest way in this case would probably be to have the textbox make an ajax call. $.get('/your/url/here', function(data) { // data will contain the results in JSON format });

Alternatively you can use a regular form, or even a single button. If it's always going to be text, you might as well just use
the.text() function.
document.getEleme ntById('your-id').text = 'text'; Digital media content (e.g., audio, video, image, text, and other types of digital media content) may be compressed to facilitate distribution, storage, and/or transmission of the digital media content. For example, when sending a digital media content (e.g., video) over a network, the digital media content may be compressed prior to transmission over the network. A video codec (e.g., a video compression/decompression standard such as Moving Picture Experts Group (MPEG) video, H.264 (also called MPEG-4, part 10, Advanced Video Coding (AVC)), and its subsequent extensions and revisions) may be used in encoding/decoding the digital media content. The video codec may efficiently compress the digital media content. In one example, a video content provider may encode a video content in accordance with a video coding standard (e.g., H.264). The video content provider may perform the encoding as part of a transaction with an end user. The video content provider may transmit the encoded video content to the end user through a distribution network (e.g., a television broadcast, a cable network, an intranet, the Internet, a wireless network, etc.). The end user may playback the encoded video content on a client device (e.g., a television, a portable media device, etc.). In accordance with the H.264 standard, an encoded video content bitstream may include a GOP ("group of pictures") structure that includes a sequence of Groups of Pictures (GOP). Each GOP
