As night falls on a modern city, the lights come on, and celebrities from television, movies, and music shows appear on the most famous television stage in America, offering their sage advice and signing an all-time classic. "America needs us, okay?" Bill Gates appeared first. The sketch, which included cameos by Julianne Moore and Jennifer Lawrence, was a "Saturday Night Live" teaser of a possible segment on the NBC show with celebrities called "Bobby" for its upcoming season. "This season, our 'Bobby' could be about anything from Donald Trump to Black Panther," showrunner Lorne Michaels said in a statement. "Let us know what you'd like to see us write about on the show." Replacing the four celebrity players of the series' early days is a team of two new team members: "Celebrity Anonymous." "The celebrity game isn't what it used to be. Used to be they'd have to answer questions. Now they just throw stuff at us and then we go home," a fellow anonymous celebrity said during the show. "I'll take the money when somebody comes up to me and says, 'Oh, I love you,'" said Peter Dinklage, who plays the Night King in the HBO hit "Game of Thrones." "We see you, Donald," Jimmy Fallon said to the Republican presidential candidate, played by Alec Baldwin, who was sitting in a square.
