Pavel Chubin Much to the confusion of reporters and amateur astronomers, on June 15 a Russian meteor exploded over the Arctic region, releasing fragments that rained down on a peaceful community of indigenous people living on the Yamalo-Nenets Autonomous district. One of the most eye-catching fragments of this meteorite—a piece of rock measuring one centimeter across—fell onto the roof of a house in the Kromskoye settlement, triggering a 12-meter-high blast wave.

Most of the area's residents were evacuated. Russian authorities announced that the meteorite had fallen in the Arctic and its fragments measured from two to 12 centimeters in size. A social worker in Chelyabinsk-1 confirmed that a small fragment had hit his family's house.

However, the meteorite had no connection to the asteroid that entered Earth's atmosphere, and no injuries were reported, thus raising doubts about the official version of what happened. Meteor
