Various types of power operated seat lifters have been used in the past. Most prior art seat lifters suffer from the disadvantage that they require a relatively large amount of power to operate or the price thereof exceeds an acceptable level. U.S. Pat. No. 3,979,033 discloses an example of such a seat lifter. The power operated seat lifter disclosed therein has a main housing which houses a high output motor. A pulley is attached to a rotating shaft of the motor and an endless belt is attached to the pulley. The belt extends through a housing to a pulley attached to a vertical shaft which carries an arm. The arm is attached to a seat and the seat is urged upwardly as it is raised by the belt and pulley. The load associated with a weight of the seat plus the user's weight is carried by the arm and transferred through the belt and pulley to the motor. A clutch may be included within the housing and the clutch is connected between the motor and pulley. The clutch enables the motor to rotate the pulley in one direction, but prevents it from rotating the pulley in the opposite direction. The clutch also enables the belt to slip when the seat is not being lifted. The seat lifter is difficult to assemble and the clutch may have a tendency to wear out after a period of use. U.S. Pat. No. 4,198,081 discloses another example of a seat lifter having a motor which is connected to a handlebar. A pulley is attached to a rotating shaft of the motor and a belt is attached to the pulley. A seat is carried on a pair of braces which are supported by the housing. The belt extends between the belt and pulley and one of the braces and is pressed against the belt and pulley to raise the seat. The load of the user's weight is carried by the belt and pulley and transfers through the motor to the pulley which rotates the shaft of the motor. Although the power seat lifter disclosed in this patent has a relatively simple drive mechanism, the seat lifter requires a large amount of power since a large amount of torque is required to raise the seat. Other known power seat lifters utilize a lift arm extending downwardly from a housing which carries a drive pulley. A drive shaft is attached to the drive pulley and extends through the housing. A tensioning arm is attached to the drive shaft and extends downwardly from the housing. A tensioning pul

The emerging field of metabonomics provides new tools that will help our understanding of cellular energetics, the cell's translational mechanisms, and the flux of metabolites through the intercellular energy network. These avenues will allow us to better understand and control energy metabolism in the cells. The aim of this study was to investigate the metabolic changes in the hypothalamic-pituitary-adrenal (HPA) axis of the offspring of dams undernourished in the fetal life. Spontaneous adrenocorticotropin (ACTH) secretion in HPA-axis of adult offspring of dams undernourished in the fetal life was compared to that of offspring of dams fed on a control diet. Male offspring from dams undernourished in the periconceptual period (gestation days 11-18) were significantly lower in body weight (mean \pm SD: 19.40 \pm 0.53) than those in the normal fed control group (22.70 \pm 0.62, p Q: Javascript variable not defined outside? i have this code here which takes 2 variables from a form and sends them to a mysql database.
