The direct measurement of the flexural fatigue in aeronautics structures - validation and the effect of tested skin condition. The flexural fatigue caused by aircraft flying over the skin is one of the most critical issues in the design of aircraft skin. The present study describes the use of a non-contact vibrometer based on a laser Doppler vibrometer for the direct measurement of flexural fatigue in aluminium and composite aircraft skin panels. A comparison between the results of the vibrometry and the fatigue curves obtained by a conventional method based on the slowly loading test of the specimens was performed. The study evaluates the capabilities of the new vibrometer for direct measurement of flexural fatigue, compares the obtained results with the fatigue curves obtained by the conventional method and describes the effect of the tested skin condition on the fatigue strength of composite aircraft skin.Quality of life scores are not improved by multidisciplinary stroke rehabilitation. Studies of multidisciplinary stroke rehabilitation are often complicated by the mix of inpatients and outpatients, heterogeneous patient populations, and the lack of control for non-rehabilitation effects. These issues are rarely addressed in studies of multidisciplinary stroke rehabilitation. We performed a trial comparing outcomes from a multicenter, randomized, controlled study of inpatient rehabilitation with outcomes after multidisciplinary outpatient rehabilitation. Both the Multidisciplinary Comprehensive Stroke Rehabilitation (MCSR) and the usual care (UC) groups improved in the NIH Stroke Scale (median change: MCSR -7, UC -2, p=0.01), Barthel Index (median change: MCSR -22, UC -10, p=0.14), Rivermead Mobility Index (median change: MCSR -1, UC -6, p=0.66), Functional Independence Measure (median change: MCSR -3, UC -1, p=0.82), and Self-Assessed Competence in Daily Activities (median change: MCSR -2, UC -2, p=0.75) and were largely similar to each other. In MCSR, the UC group is post hoc. Overall, there were no beneficial effects of MCSR compared to UC (all p>0.05) on either the NIH Stroke Scale or the other outcomes, despite enrollment of 49% of the eligible population. The SF-36, which measures overall health-related quality of life, improved similarly in MCSR (

National News Kirk Mullen, E2, to Lead St. Mary's Hospital for the Homeless Kirk Mullen, chief executive of St. Mary's Hospital, the 12-story hospital in downtown San Francisco, is going to the hills to lead the Marin-Sonoma Council of Catholic Charities, which provides social services for homeless people. Mullen is stepping down after 17 years of service at St. Mary's, where he was chairman of the board and chief executive. He is the first president in CCC's 64-year history. The council is a nonprofit agency that serves clients with mental illness and substance-abuse problems. Its 125 employees and 3,000 volunteers spend about $23 million a year for direct services. "I'm pleased to have joined an organization that has made such a significant contribution to Marin-Sonoma counties, providing vital services to some of our most vulnerable citizens," says Mullen, who is an Erie native. Christina O'Halloran, chief operating officer of the council, expects Mullen's previous experience as head of a large hospital will come in handy during a time when the nonprofit agency's yearly budget is increasing and "exponential" growth seems likely. "We'll need new approaches," she says. "We're in the midst of a housing crisis." She expects the council will continue to receive a grant from the federal Emergency Shelter and Auxiliary Services program, which provides temporary emergency housing in the community. The council also will serve as the coordinating agency for Masses at St. Mary's, which began in the early 1970s under Mullen's guidance. Mullen continued to shepherd the program, which now has about 1,000 participants, until the hospital's building opened in 1975. He is planning on being at the first Mass on the new hospital's ground floor. Mullen will oversee the kickoff of the new organization, which officially will be launched in October. The council's board of directors will hire a new executive director. Mullen doesn't intend to retire from St. Mary's, but simply to focus on the council. "I've enjoyed having the opportunity to work with a wide variety of people and
